Seven will certainly be in Rome, I wrote to him ^{and} ^{was} fishing for you, and that I had hopes, and he has answered ^{you} in a sentence of joy on the occasion. Whether you are in three ^{or possibly in two,} or four, the expense of travelling post will be much the same as crawling out in a "voiture", - rather less indeed in amount, only you will be a long time on the road, and therefore not kept so long for your money. You must hire a carriage at Calais, or you must buy one (as I did) and sell it again at half price, ^{or as you can}. I'll give you facts. Six months ago our banker, Mr. Johnstone, went with three other persons from Florence to Paris; the carriage was his own, so no expense was on that

The £50 is not due from you till next November, nor can I possibly want it before. Pay it to Mansur, and he will either give you a receipt, or return the bill which I left with Skynner.
Pay him also the money from Heats. I never heard of his having any hope, from Chisney. The return of this money is as if I had found it, for I never much calculated on it, and latterly not at all, ~~notwithstanding~~ notwithstanding what you wrote about Geo Heats. By good luck I have not destroyed the account between me and poor John Heats. The balance in my favour, on 22^d Dec^r 1819, was £6.4.1, agreed to by his initials. After that time, the Account is as follows, - for it is proper I should send a copy of it:

1819 Dec ^r 22.	Balance	£ 6. 4. 1
1820 Jan ^y 1	Examiners	2. 10. 10
" "	Half Wine & Spirits bill	5. 9. 6
" 8	Boot-maker's bill	3. 6. 6
March	D ^r . Bree	4. 4. -
"	Coach hire	. 3. -
" 22	Board 3 months	15. -. -
May 4	Sundries	. 6. 6
" "	One week's rent in advance at Kent's Town	1. 1. -
" 6	Board 1½ months	7. 10. -
" "	Loan	50. -. -
" "	Half wine & Spirits bill	5. 18. -
1821 March 6	M ^r . Roddy's bill	13. 11. -
		115. 4. 5
	L ^{ts} received of J ^r K 6 th Feb ^r 1820	40. -. - £ 75. 4. 5 Balance due.

You may mention that he and I always had a running account together. The above is ~~the~~ an exact copy, with this exception, - I have omitted to charge interest on the £50 loan, though it is entered in the account. Because it was interest I had actually paid to Skynner for that identical sum which I had borrowed from him to lend to Keats, before I set off on my second trip to the Highlands. But as it is unpleasant to my feelings to mention any thing about interest, especially as if that is once begun upon it would raise the amount to nearly £100, I would rather omit it altogether. I never saw Miss Keats, - for which her guardian is answerable, - yet though I never saw her, my congratulations on her marriage, and my wishes for her welfare and happiness are not the less hearty; - have the goodness to tell her so.
